COMMERCE IS DISCUSED

Consular Affairs Also Explained in an Interesting Manner to the

The first annual banquet of the Diplomatic and Consular Club of the George Washington University was given at the Young Men's Christian Association dining hall Tuesday evening, Prof. Monaghan, lecturer on the consular service, presiding as toastmaster.

The purpose of this gathering was to bring the members of the club and the faculty of the university in touch with the Department of State and the business world. After a generous repast, toasts were responded to as follows:

O. P. Austin, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, of the Department of Com-merce and Labor, spoke instructively of the wonderful development of the commerce of the world and of the efficient part played by the consul in com-mercial activities. Mr. Austin particularly emphasized the growing efficiency of the consular service in its relation to the commerce of the world, under the present administration of the State Department. He foresees great possibilities in the added impetus given to the commerce of this country by the reorganized

The Consular Service.

Wilbur J. Carr, chief of the Consular Bureau of the Department of State, ably responded to a toast on the consular service. Mr. Carr emphasized the importance of a practical, as well as a theoretical, training for the foreign ser-vice. He further urged the necessity of providing a course of practical instruction in the various bureaus relating to the work of a consul. This train-ing should be a prerequisite of every man who enters the consular service. Then, said Mr. Carr, success would depend only upon the diligence of the offi-cial and the faithful performance of his duties. These words have great weight as coming from a man who himself exemplifies them in every particular.

Prof. Swisher, of the George Washing-ton University, favored the club with some very entertaining stories which were supplemented with a talk on the historical phase of the consular service importance of a practical knowledge of the work.

The business world was well represented by C. A. Green, special foreign agent of the R. G. Dun & Co. mercantile agency. Mr. Green addressed the club on what is being done and what re mains to be done in the elimination of dread and in the inauguration of a universal era of trust born of a confidence based, not upon a game or a gamester, but upon a belief that honesty is the best policy, not only because it pays, but because it is right.

Foreign Trade Conditions.

The bureau of trade relations was represented in the person of its chief, John B. Osborne, who in an eloquent and masterly manner outlined the development of the method of reporting trade conditions of foreign countries, by American consuls. Mr. Osborne's discourse on the employment of the development of the method of reporting trade conditions of foreign countries, by course on the employment of the merit system in the advancement of the consuls by the Department of State augurs well for increased efficiency in the servner, added materially to the pleasure of the occasion by relating timely incidents and witty anecdotes.
